It happens on a regular basis: you need a transmitter from one manufacturer and a manifold valve from another, with proper ID tagging. And then you need to take the time to put them together and test for proper assembly and to make sure nothing leaks. This adds valuable time to your installation projects, particularly if you’re installing multiple assemblies at once.

Here’s a better solution. Whether it’s adding a manifold to a transmitter, a block and bleed valve to your gauge, a positioner to your process valve, or a chemical seal to your pressure gauge, transmitter, or switch, the Lesman team will perform the assemblies and testing, and send you the completed units ready for installation.

Chemical seals and fills are often necessary to protect your process instrumentation from harm. But the wait for a custom gauge-and-seal, switch-and-seal, or transmitter-and-seal combination could be an issue, keeping your process offline for longer than necessary, or costing a premium for quick delivery. We’ve removed the potential for downtime and rush charges with our WIKA-certified assembly station, and improved stock of most popular transmitters, switches, gauges, diaphragm seals, and fill fluids. Lesman customers can experience next-day delivery on custom assemblies from in-stock instrumentation.

Through our relationship with Kele, Lesman and A-Tech can offer our customers panels and enclosures with quick delivery. With more than 30 years experience building quality panels, Kele’s UL508A panel shop can build one or hundreds of panels to your exact specification.

If you have existing panels and need parts, or want to build your own panel, shop our Enclosures and Accessories section at Lesman.com.
